Letha Wilson, “Landmarks and Monuments” at Art in General, NY April 20-June 30, 2013

Wilson’s works, which are either sculpture-mounted photographs or photo-curious sculptures, depending on which medium you favor — and seem to follow in Robert Smithson’s spiraling footsteps in either case — achieved new levels of richness and formal complexity in her solo show at the Tribeca non-profit. She continued to stage collisions between coarse construction materials, landscape photographs, and the archetypal American wilderness they depict, while also incorporating the unique architectural features of Art in General’s loft space, from its bricked-up windows to its upcycled ship mast columns. — Benjamin Sutton
